Gwen Hill

Gwen Hill is a Research Development Coordinator in the Office of Research Services at RRU, and a student in the Royal Roads Master of Arts in Interdisciplinary Studies program. Her research focuses on intergenerational communication in the workplace, and the engagement of Millennials in leadership and management. Outside of her MA work, she is part of a research team working to define and assess research quality in an inter and transdisciplinary context at Royal Roads University. Prior to joining RRU, Hill worked in global development at IBM and spent a few years learning to fly seaplanes along the coast of British Columbia in Canada. Her background in corporate culture mean that she approaches academia with a practitioner view to implementing and disseminating research as widely as possible.
