

Academic Member and Ambassador
Communication Institute of Greece

Veronica Coram
Doctoral Student
Politics and International Relations
University of Adelaide
Australia

Veronica Coram

Veronica is a doctoral student in Political Science and International Relations at the University of Adelaide. Her research focuses on political thinking and participation patterns across the life course. She is interested in how citizens form policy attitudes and the link between public opinion and policymaking. Veronica also works as a research assistant at the University of Adelaide, currently on a project investigating obstacles to the political participation of people experiencing homelessness. Veronica has a professional background in Public Policy and Project Management, including working for the Australian Government and universities. She holds degrees in Political Science, Public Policy and Management from the University of Melbourne, University of Western Australia and University of Adelaide.

Academic Member and Ambassador
Communication Institute of Greece

