Paraskevi Kontoleon,

Ms Paraskevi Kontoleon is an early career teaching academic and course developer at the University of South Australia's Law School. She is also a supervising solicitor at the UniSA Legal Advice Clinic where final year law students undertake clinical legal placement. Prior to her career in academia Paraskevi worked in private practice for approximately ten years where she worked on various civil legal disputes and mentored graduate lawyers. Paraskevi's research areas include learning and teaching, and in particular looking at new and interactive ways to teach law courses (including peer to peer teaching) and clinical legal education. She also conducts research on health law and intellectual property (with a focus on music law and ethical issues regarding intellectual property rights). Since 2016, Paraskevi has been an active member of the Flipped Learning Community of Practice at the University of Adelaide and has presented at a number of national and international conferences and workshops with her colleagues in the Community on learning and teaching. In 2020 Paris also commenced her own private legal practice and consulting business (please see at www.pklaw.com.au). Since January 2021 we are honored that she has accepted to become a legal advisor of the Communication Institute of Greece.
